The Covington Emente.

The leading anti-Union organ of this State, the Louisville Journal, is striving to make Covington a few days since, when George E. Pugh undertook to make a speech at a McClellan and Pendleton meeting, one of the officers of which at least was a blatent ted to go to the polls and vote, without secessionist. The facts are as we give them below, copied from the statement made to the Cincinnati Gazette, and which we are rather than overstating Pughs conduct. Pugh was drunk. The Journal can make the most of such affairs; but we can tell it, the soldiers will not quietly hear themselves and officers abused by such rebels as George E.

Pugh, even with the Journal to back him : Mr. Pugh started out by declaring that our victories were mere telegraphic lies, used to keep spirit and courage up among the Abolitionists. He stated that Kentucky was ruled by a tyranical hand, and indulged in very insulting and sneering remarks about the soldiers-spoke of "Beast Butler" and "Brute Burbridge," and used many other ungentlemanly and vulgar epithets. There were quite a number of soldiers of the Invalid Corps, from the Main Street U. S. General Hospital present, and when they heard such officers as Gens. Butler and Burbridge villified, were, of course, quite indignant. A soldier from Sherman's army who had receieved a terrible wound in the face from a rebel bullet, shouted out, when he heard Mr. Pugh characterize the rebels as Southern brethren : ". have been there, they put a bullet through my jaw, and I don't consider them 'brethren,' present, for Lincoln and Johnson, were so loud and continued, that Mr. Pugh found it impossible to make himself heard, and restired from the stand. The crowd began to disperse, when some of the soldiers tore

WM. ROMANS, J. G. C. Sept. 27, 1864-1m.

The fact can not be denied, with any regard to truth, that, in 1861, Gen. George B. McClellan, the nominee of the Chicago others from raising Union troops in Kentucky. He did prevent it for a long time and thousands of the young men of Kentucky were seduced into the rebel army, that October 1. but for McClellan's course, would have been in the Union army. Had not General Rousseau gained audience with the President, and obtained authority direct from him, McClellan would have let Buckner capture Louisville, and obtain control of Kentucky. He played the same game with East Ten, relieved them in 1863.

Let those who doubt these facts apply to go for Mr. Lincoln. Gen. Rousseau.

Under the heading "Prophetic," the anti-Union Democratic organs are again circulating the forgery purporting to be an extract from a speech said to have been des livered by Mr. Webster, March 7, 1850, in shown that Mr. Webster never uttered the language ascribed to him, nor any thing approximating to it; and yet with unblushing impudence the anti-Union organs reiterate and republish the forgery.

Mr. Lincoln has before him a proposition from Georgia for a peace, which he can have in ten days if he will.

No doubt, by recognizing the rebel Contederacy, and disgracing the Union soldiers by a dishonorable yielding to Jeff. Davis' demands, he could have a peace in ten days, and it would continue about ten days.

If you suffer with Diarrhea and Dysentery try one bottle.
